Write a template for a function called total. The function should keep a running total of values entered by the user stored in an array, then return the total. The argument sent into the function should be an array and the number of values.

Test the template in a simple driver program that sends values of various types (integers, doubles, and Rational numbers) as arguments and displays the results.